

IBM and UCC project to study risk management

by Eoin English

COMPUTER giant IBM and University College Cork (UCC) have teamed up for a new research project to help big business and governments manage risk and make better decisions.

The IDA-backed Risk Management Analytics research collaboration will see UCC joining IBM's worldwide network of advanced analytic centres.

UCC scientists will work with Science Foundation Ireland and IBM research scientists in Switzerland and New York on technologies to manage risk.

The technologies can be used to assess and plan for potential supplier or labour disruptions or to make smarter investments in energy sources.

